HOLLAND
HALL

Our story...

Holland Hall Est. 1654.

When Holland Hall was built, there were only 25 countires discovered in the world.
Now there are 195...And we're still standing!

Holland Hall is a 17th Century Grade II listed building; the original 'Holland House' built in 1654 remains in its entirety - a large part of the present day hotel.
Some of the original Baroque architecture is still in situ, including the original pedimented studded door with its frame-moulded architrave and sash windows. The door, which is located at the front entrance of the old hall, in its original stone masonry, can be seen from within the foyer in its full glory.
Previous refurbishments have revealed a number of priest-holes; one was found concealed in the wall and is now a feature of one of our guest-rooms within the old building. Another priest-hole is situated under the fireplace in the main entrance hall. The building has had an extensive and sympathetic restoration, whilst retaining many of its original features and period charm, the re-development of the property has added all the required modern facilities resulting in a contemporary Hotel Venue.
